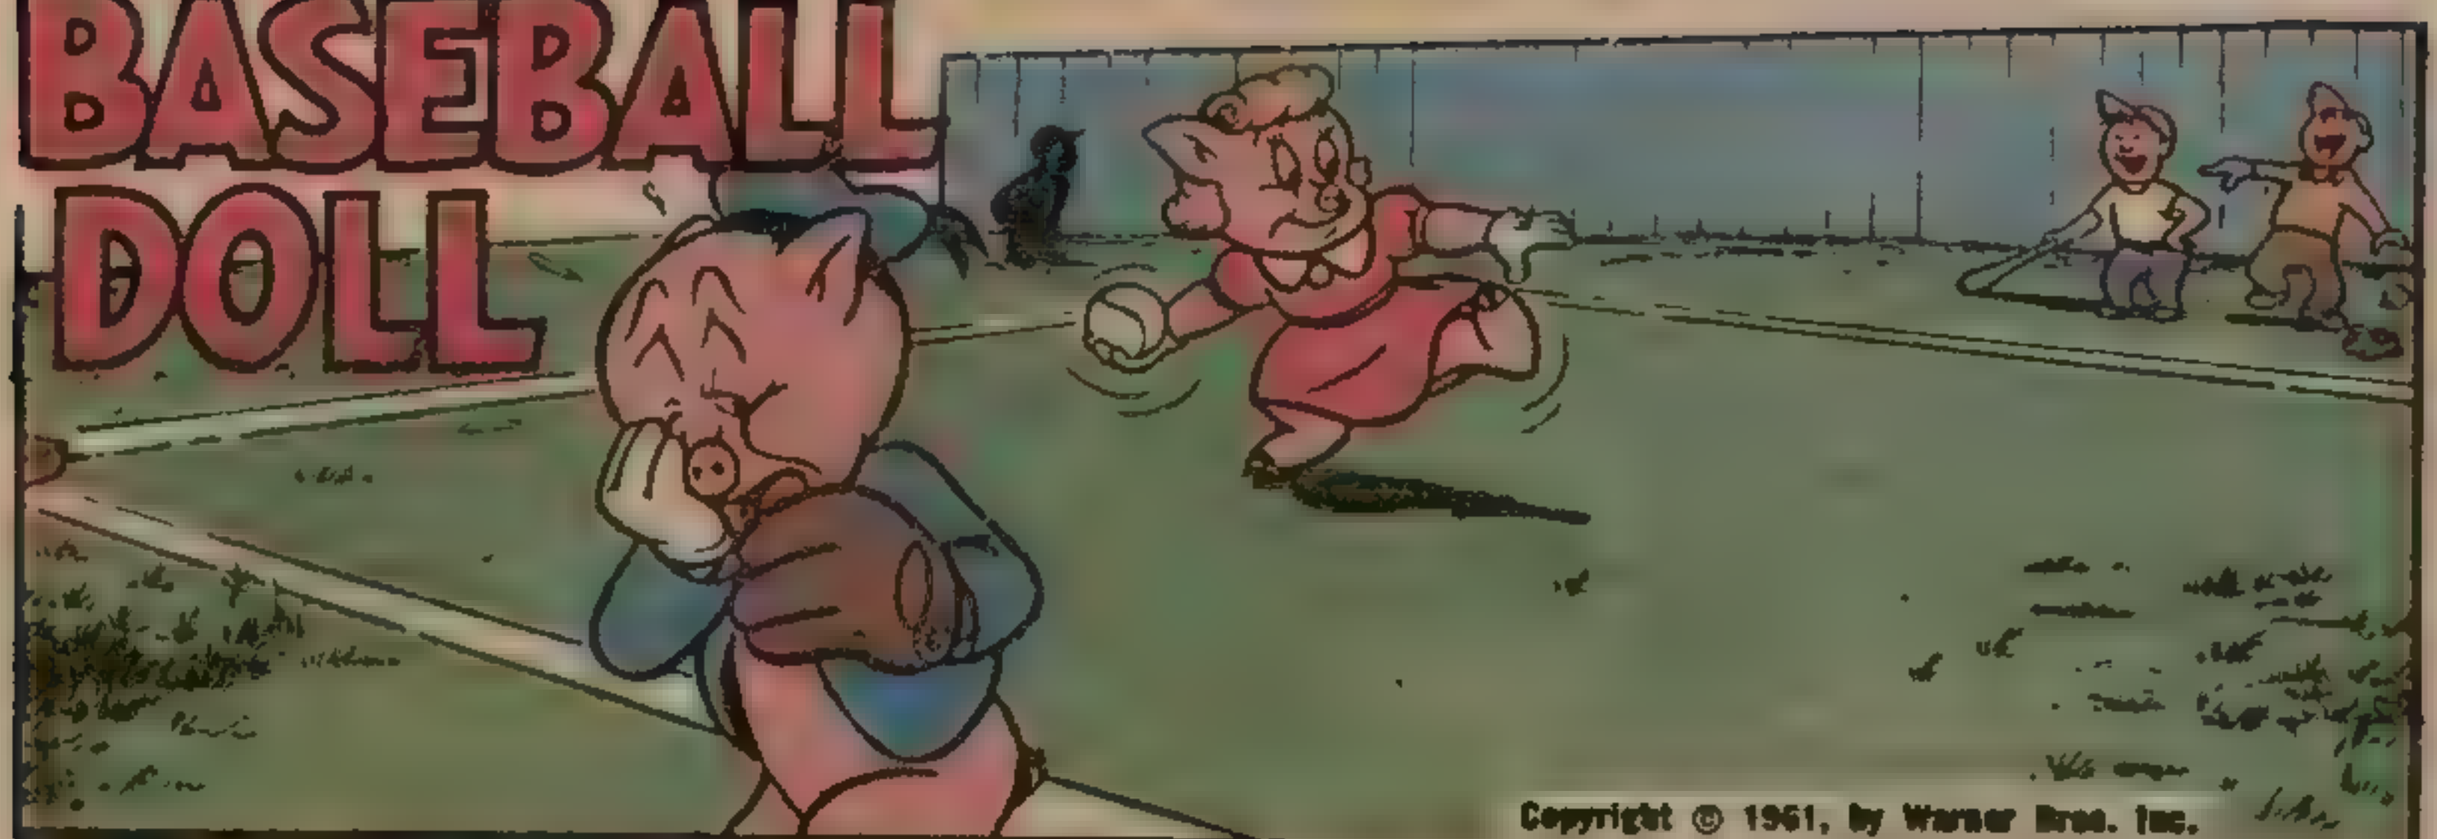
BASEBALL DOLL



"You'll have to forget your baseball game today," Petunia told Cicero Pig. "Your cousin Cynthia doesn't get to visit you very often, and you must entertain her."

"But . . ." Cicero protested. "The baseball team needs me to help beat the Tigers! Cynthia could watch, couldn't she?"

Cynthia clutched her doll and shook her head. "I hate baseball," she said.

"That settles it," Petunia said to Cicero. "Why don't the two of you take a walk or play some nice little game?"

"Like dolls," Cynthia said.

Cicero held his head. "Oh great," he groaned. "This is too much!"

As they started out the door, Cynthia handed him her doll. "You can be the daddy," she told him.

"Thanks a lot," Cicero muttered, holding the doll gingerly between two fingers.

Just then, some players of the Tigers' team came by. "Well, look at the star pitcher for the opposition!" one boy hooted. "Does the itsy-bitsy pitcher play with dollies in his spare time?"

"They ought to be a cinch to beat," another boy chuckled as the team trotted ahead to the practice field.

Cicero was beside himself. "Look, Cynthia," he pleaded, "if you watch the game, I'll play dolls with you all day!"

"You promise?" Cynthia asked slowly.

"I promise!" Cicero cried. "Come on!" He grabbed her hand and pulled her after him before she could change her mind.

"Here he comes!" his teammates shouted. "Hurry up, Cicero. You're late!"

Cicero grabbed the ball and took his place on the mound. "Play ball!" the umpire yelled.

The first Tiger swung his bat. C-r-a-c-k! The ball whizzed high over Cicero's head to the far end of the field. "A home run!" Cicero groaned.

He pitched to the second Tiger and winced as he heard the crack of the bat against the ball. It was a hit! So was the third ball he pitched. Cicero shook his head in despair.

Cynthia walked across the field to him. "If you hold my doll," she said, "I'll pitch for you."

"But . . ." Cicero sputtered, "I thought you hated baseball!"

"I do," Cynthia sighed. "There aren't many children on our block, and my brothers are always after me to bat and pitch on their team. I get sick of it!"

There was a round of jeers from the Tigers as Cynthia took the mound. "That's a pitcher?" one Tiger hooted.

Cynthia wound up and pitched. It was a strike!

"Beginner's luck!" a Tiger shouted. But the second and third strikes brought nothing but an amazed silence from the Tigers. Two more outs, and the side was retired.

Cynthia at bat was even more remarkable. She swung at the first pitch, and Cicero's team had a home run. When the game ended, they had won five to one!

"And now we'll play dolls," Cynthia said firmly.

"Okay," Cicero grinned. "I'll be the daddy." He pointed to his teammates. "And they'll be the uncles!"

Later, Petunia said, "You seemed to get along nicely with Cynthia, after all."

Cicero chuckled, "Dolls or no dolls, she bats 1000 with me!"
